

Romany- Finding a practical way of applying your passion...

Romany worked fulltime while completing the Agents of Change Program. With support from Irise's team she was able to develop practical skills and felt like she was part of a little community achieving real change for marginalised girls.

“It’s intimate and friendly and unique– you feel like you’re really at the forefront creating change.”

Isabel – Discovering leadership potential...

Isabel was able to build her confidence through the program and inspired her friends to fundraise with her. Through the mentorship provided by the team Isabel discovered her leadership potential and went on to establish a Friends of Irise group at the University of Birmingham, motivating others to work with Irise to support disadvantaged girls.

“It’s a really exciting opportunity to get involved in something really good. If you’re passionate then that comes across to others around you, you’ll be able to make it work.”

Chloe – Thinking about the future...

Chloe completed the program alongside her Masters degree. The training gave her an opportunity to reflect on her future career goals and helped her find the inner confidence to pursue them.

“When I’ve been doing job applications I now put ‘I’ve learned this from Irise, this from Irise and this from Irise’ – I think it’s given me a lot of skills I will take onto my future career.”

Hannah – Bringing the gap...

Agents of Change helped Hannah transition from student to young professional by helping her develop key skills for a career in the third sector.

“I feel I have developed as a person, after my interview with my current job, they thought I had really good critical thinking skills, that I developed here with Irise, its given me a leg up to getting into the third sector.”
